

Changing Lives: Ministry with Young People in Transition

The background of the entire image is a soft-focus green field. In the foreground, three young plants are growing out of a mound of dark brown soil. From left to right, the plants increase in height and maturity. The first is a small, pale yellow-green seedling with a curved stem. The second is a taller, vibrant green seedling with two rounded leaves. The third is the tallest, with a more developed stem and several leaves, some showing signs of budding.

Working with youth or young adults means working with people living through some of the greatest changes in their lives: from child to adolescent and from adolescent to adult. What theological and developmental resources can the church offer to support young people in ministry?

Come and see—

May 3, 2014

9:30 a.m.–5:00 p.m.

Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley